CHAMBERLAIN STEPS DOWN IN BRITAIN

Prime Minister Shuffles Cabinet To Elevate More Forceful Men

By JOE ALEX MORRIS
U. P. Foreign News Editor

Neville Chamberlain, statesman of a vanished era of appeasement, stepped down from the British cabinet and out of public life today in a move that symbolized Great Britain's determination to wage relentless war against Germany on all fronts. Chamberlain has been in poor health following a serious operation.

Coincident with Chamberlain's retirement Prime Minister Winston Churchill reshuffled his cabinet to bring more of his new, hard-hitting administrators to the top.

On the war front, British planes ranged from Scandinavia to east Africa, blasting at German and Italian bases with heavy loads of bombs.

The British public which had cheered Chamberlain on his return from Munich with "peace in our time" and had cheered him again when he proclaimed that "Hitler Missed the bus"—just before the Nazi invation of Norway—approved his resignation.

Churchill upped two of his forceful labor party aides in the cabinet revision. Herbert Morrison, Minister of supply, took over the key post of mnister of home and security which deals with the multitudinous problems arising from Germany's air bombbardment and invasion threats. Ernest Beven, labor minister, went into the inner war cabinet.

Chamberlain's nominal post of Lord President of the Council went to sir John Anderson who vacated the home ministery. Sir Kingsley Wood, Chancellor of the exchequer

4-H Clubs Sponsor Citizenship Study

Older Members Will Have Opportunity To Volunteer For Special Training

Following a special meeting of the county 4-H Club Council on Monday night, it was announced that the council will sponsor in El Dorado County a study in the democratic form of government which it is hoped may prove attractive to Senior 4-H Club members and other older members of the organization.

The study, in twelve topics grouped under the heading, Training for Citizenship in a Democracy," affords the opportunity for older club members to volunteer to take one or more of the topics and prepare himself to discuss the topic before his own club, his Farm Center or other community organization.

The topic, it was explained, is not to be "recited" according to the outline, but is to be presented by the speaker following a study of the outline, in his own words.

The plan is expected to result in a more thorough understanding of the democratic form of government and thus, in improved citizenship, and it is hoped that some of those who may volunteer may appear at group and other gatherings throughout the county to give talks.

Ellsworth Williard has been designated by the 4-H Council to assist the speakers in preparing their presentations.

The Council made plans for achievement Night on October 26, tentatively at the Missouri Flat community hall, at which Frank Spurrier, Northern California 4-H Club leader, will be present to assist E. Ogden Hook, county key banker, in presenting achievement awards.

Plans also were made for participating in the annual Senior Day, at Berkeley on October 19, when several of the Senior 4-H Club members from the county will share with others from the northern part of the state in a day at the state university.

WASHINGTON, (UP) — President Roosevelt will give the Unted States and the entire Western Hemisphere a report on America's rearmament in a radio speech on the night of Oct. 12, Columbus Day, from Dayton, O.

Secretary Stephen T. Early said it will be non-political. Accordingly, he said, it will be transmitted free by the National Broadcasting Co., the Columbia Broadcasting System and the Mutual Broadcasting System.

The President will deliver the hemispheric address at 9 p. m., E. S. T., from a private car on a special train which will carry him to Dayton. National Newspaper Week

October 1 to 8

Your Friend—The Newspaper

We join with newspapers in the forty-eight states in the observance of National Newspaper Week, October 1 to 8, and in fulfillment thereof presume to point out to you in words some of the deeds which make The Newspaper—Your Friend.

The newspaper has a peculiar position in the American scheme of things by reason of the services it affords and yet it is a business and as such a basic part of the community.

Through the business office—separate and apart from the newspaper in printed form—it contributes in various ways to the support and encouragement of many and various endeavors of high purpose in community betterment.

Through the printed columns it adds further support to such undertakings and becomes a mouthpiece for the expression of community opinions. The newspaper advertises through its news columns, the doings of the community. This takes the form of write-ups calling attention to such events as community fund-raising campaigns for various purposes.

The newspaper through its advertising columns presents to housewives and homemakers "the news" about things they may want to purchase, serving both the homemaker and the merchant by helping to bring together the store which has a stove to sell, and the home which needs it.

The classified advertising columns of the newspaper provide the way for a broader application of this service to meet many and varied requirements for renting, buying, selling or exchanging among individuals.

We have reserved until the last the mention of the service most commonly associated in the public mind with the newspaper, and that is the reporting of the happenings in the community, the news. Today's newspaper is a contemporary history of its community.

The newspaper advertises our success and minimizes our failures; it shares the joys and the sorrows in the life of the community and in the lives of its readers.

Your Friend—The Newspaper, aspires to justify its place in the community in public service.

CHEERS GREET WILLKIE IN OHIO

Republican Nominee Sees Need For Re-Building Of America Within

By WILLIAM H. LAWRENCE
United Press Staff Correspondent

YOUNGSTOWN, O. (UP)—Republican Presidential Nominee Wendell L. Willkie said today that "there is not on the statute books a single protective statute that I will not vigorously defend," but added that "collective bargaining does no good if you have no job."

Willkie drew a cheer when he declared that he wanted to revitalize the domestic economy "so that this great city can move forward again instead of remaining static."

He urged the election of G. O. P. Congressional Nominee Anderson, Gov. John W. Bricker, and Harold H. Burton for Senator.

"Youngstown," he said, "typifies the doctrine I am preaching. America is at this hour surrounded on all sides by belligerent, ruthless nations all highly armed. America has as much danger of passing out from the dangers within as from without."

"We will not save America by arms alone, but we must become strong within."

He charged that when "the party in power has systematically over a period of seven years sought to divide Americans into groups, sought to close the minds of some men so they will not receive knowledge, then I say that party and its leadership betrays the interests of America."

He said he sought votes "upon the basis of the ability of the Republican party to carry into practice what we say."

"If this administration is re-elected to office," Willkie said, "no social security will ever be paid to the workers of America . . . because this country will go bankrupt."

Willkie said the only city that had "shown any strength" under the new deal was Washington.

"I want to make Youngstown grow," he said, "I don't care anything about making Washington grow."

"If there is any man in this town against me," he said, "I urge him to hear what I have to say about labor . . . listen to what I say . . . then I shall be content because I know on the basis of logic . . . this will be the most overwhelming victory for the Republican party."

The 48 enlisted men and two officers who recently underwent experimental training at Highstown, N. J., will form the nucleus of the battalion.

POWER POLICY OF NEW DEAL STIRS ROW

Hot Republican Attack Promises Fire Flashes In Senate During Day

By LYLE C. WILSON
United Press Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, (UP) — Top flight new dealers identified with President Roosevelt's electrical power policies are under hot Republican attack today in a political battle which promises to flash fire in the senate before sundown.

Sen. H. Styles Bridges, R., N. H., charged Solicitor General Francis Biddle with "abuse of official position" to injure the Chattanooga, Tenn., Free Press which was competing with the Chattanooga News in which he said Biddle had financial interests.

Bridges implied that Sen. George W. Norris, Ind., Neb., had induced former Public Works Administrator Harold L. Ickes to "pour $60,000,000 down a Nebraska rat hole" to improve his 1936 chances of re-election. He said army and PWA engineers had rejected three Nebraska hydro-electric projects which Ickes finally helped finance at Norris' insistence.

Another accusation made by Sen. Bridges was that Federal Works Administrator John Carmody had circulated false charges that Republican Presidential Candidate Wendell L. Willkie had used utility stockholders' money to subsidize one Chattanooga paper and had wrecked another in the same city which advocated a rural electrification program.

Bridges put his charges on record last night in the senate for the benefit of two or three colleagues and a few gallery spectators who remained after 6 p. m. to hear him. Norris was not present but the attack is expected to arouse the Nebraska veteran to reply today in what probably will be one of the

2-Ocean Navy Is Launched

U. S. Sets Up Patrol Force In Atlantic Including 125 Ships

WASHINGTON, (UP)—Establishment of a new naval patrol force in the Atlantic was believed today to be a preliminary step in the formation of the projected two-ocean navy.

The Navy Department announced that more than 125 of its vessels and an undisclosed number of aircraft operating off the eastern seaboard would be consolidated into a new patrol which will be expanded periodically. It is another move to strengthen Atlantic defenses and coincides with preparations for new air and naval bases on recently acquired British sites.

Spokesmen said the new force would consist of the present Atlantic squadron, ships and planes of the neutrality patrol, new vessels under construction, and ships recently purchased for conversion to naval use. There was no indication that any ships in the main fleet in the Pacific would be recalled.

CHAPTER XXXII

THE day before Marianne was to leave Centerville, she asked to see David. He was much better now, Eve had told her.

When she entered his room, David's eyes glowed.

"My princess," he said shyly, holding out his arms.

She put her arms about him and kissed him.

"Miss Eve says you've been sick," he said.

"But I'm all right now. I came to tell you goodbye."

"Goodbye!" David looked distressed.

"I won't stay away long," Marianne assured him. "I'm just going to find a girl—a girl who got lost a long time ago."

"A little girl like Rose Ann or Deena?" David asked wonderingly.

"Would you like for me to tell you a story about her?" Marianne asked.

"A story!" David breathed ecstatically.

MARIANNE laid her head down by his.

"A lot of things happened to this girl," she began.

"Bad things?" David's voice trembled.

"Yes. So the girl got lost in a—a—dark forest. And away from the sunlight, she became ugly and mean and . . ."

"But if she's mean, maybe she'll hurt you when you find her. Don't go."

"She won't hurt me," Marianne assured him. "And she wants to get out of the dark forest. You wouldn't have me leave her there, would you, David?"

"No," David answered solemnly. "If I were all well I'd go with you. We'd go in and bring her out. Gee, wouldn't that be fun!"

"Yes, that would be—fun. But you can help me in another way."

"What is it?" David asked eagerly.

"Get well by the time I return. Because I have grand times planned for us. I'm going to get a place out here somewhere and we will live in it. You and I and . . ."

"And Mr. Bailey!" shrieked David.

"Oh, no!" Marianne hoped he did not notice her unsteady tone. "Just you and I and my mother."

"But what about the lost girl? Won't she want to live with us?"

"Perhaps. We'll see about that later."

"Oh, gee!" David said excitedly.

"Now kiss me goodby"—Marianne returned his convulsive squeeze—"and get well faster than fast!"

"I promise!" David waved as she left the room.

THE NEXT morning, Marianne left for Centerville. Eve, her mother, and Dr. Lawson were sworn to secrecy as to her whereabouts.

"You mustn't feel badly," Dr. Lawson consoled Eve as she sat tearfully in his office after Marianne had gone.

"But I hate to think of her going away like that by herself!"

"She'll be all right. The very fact that she thinks the trip will help will do the trick."

Suddenly, his arms were about her.

"Seeing you cry like this—Eve dear, I guess I fell in love with you the first time I saw you. I hadn't intended to tell you so soon . . ."

"Oh, Doctor Law . . ."

"My name is Barry. Won't you call me Barry and say you care a little for me?"

"I c-c-care a lot," Eve stammered, "but I don't deserve . . ."

"Why dig up the past, honey? We've found each other—"

They heard steps coming down the hall, and the doctor released Eve just as his secretary entered.

"Mr. Bailey is here to see you," the girl announced.

"Show him in," said the doctor. Eve slipped out a side door.

"I CAME to ask a favor," Leonard began abruptly as he entered.

"Granted before asked," Dr. Lawson answered, smiling.

"I'm getting married next month," Leonard continued jerkily.

The doctor looked his surprise.

"Congratulations! Er—who is the lucky girl?"

"Jill Jackson. I'm leaving the real estate game. Having a streak of luck with my writing—"

"I see . . . Well, what's the favor you want?"

"I want you to be best man. The wedding will be next month."

"Tickled to death, old man. And I hope I'll be asking you to do the same for me soon, if Miss Minear—"

"Miss Minear!"

"Eve." Dr. Lawson was watching Leonard's face closely. "You surely didn't think I meant Marianne? Er—by the way, I suppose I can tell you now that she's been a patient here."

"A patient! Here? Then she didn't go with Deslie!"

"Why, no—didn't you know that had been broken off?"

"May I—do you suppose she would see me?"

"I said she had been a patient here. She's gone now."

"Gone! Where?"

The doctor didn't answer. He studied Leonard for a moment. Then:

"Listen here, Len," he said bluntly. "Do you think it is quite fair to a girl like Jill to marry her when you're in love with some one else?"

Over the Hill to Canada

General George C. Marshall, U. S. Army chief, has revealed that the Army is releasing several hundred old World War tanks to Canada for training purposes. Here, a huge old baby leads a lot of little ones in maneuvers. By act of Congress, the U. S. Army is now forbidden to repair or put gasoline in these because of their advanced age.

GERMAN EXPECTATION OF MILITARY VICTORY GIVES PLACE TO HOPE FOR ECONOMIC OVERTHROW OF GREAT BRITAIN

By J. W. T. MASON
United Press War Expert

German expectation of military victory in Europe seems to be giving way to hope of the economic overthrow of the British Empire as the present bad weather season begins to affect the intensity of the Nazi air attacks. The new economics section of the German general staff now is gaining its first attention in the war with predictions that hunger will overtake Britain this winter, bringing the conflict to an end.

There is no evidence to support this conclusion. British shipping lanes continue open and American correspondents in Great Britain report no interruption of food supplies reaching the British ports.

Though for one week in September the sinkings of British cargo ships were greater than for any other week of the war, there is no indication in London that countermeasures to reduce shipping losses cannot be taken. The 50 new American destroyers transferred to Britain would seem able to strengthen the convoy system sufficiently to curb any fresh submarine menace.

Rather than giving encouragement to Hitler, the fundamental conclusions of the economics section of the German high command concerning international trade in war time should have disheartening effect. The German army's economic bureau was established after the last world war following the high command's conviction that Germany's defeat was not due to military reasons but to the nation's economic collapse, which again appears to threaten the Nazi regime.

The economic section is under orders to be rigorously realistic. During the period of planning for the present war Major-General Thomas, chief of the economics section, outlined before the officials of the Reichsbank the essential financial and commercial conditions of warfare. These economic findings of the German army now must receive major attention with Germany.

Major General Thomas has laid down as the basic conclusion of the army's economics section that the world trade is an essential factor for guaranteeing national defense. He asserts that while reserves of supplies are necessary, they tie up large sums of money. Economic isolation leads to rising costs of living and employs far more workmen at home, enforcing their withdrawal from the army, than if the goods were purchased abroad.

The economics section further has become convinced that countries most active in international trade have the greatest economic resistance in warfare, and Major-General Thomas emphasizes that experience has shown that technical progress goes hand in hand with world trade. He also points out that only by international trade can gold and foreign exchange be obtained which he emphasizes play such an important part in modern wars.

His final conclusion is that international trade for Germany must be very difficult in a world divided into economic units such as the Nazi economic theories support. This frank examination of economic influences upon victory in war, coming from the German army's specialists, indicates the serious attention which the German high command is paying to Germany's financial and commercial limitations.

The conflict with the British empire is becoming more economic than military. Great Britain holds the offensive, economically, with Germany on the defensive. There can be no evasion of this fact. The German high command's analysis of economic conditions shows in every detail an advantage for the British and an increasingly disadvantageous position for the Germans.

As the war goes into next year with possibilities of still further prolongation, the economic phase will become paramount. International trade, as the most enduring of all war weapons, was recognized outset of the present conflict, causby the German general staff at the ing Germany's intensive drive for a short war. Now that hostilities are to be prolonged, Germany is facing its most vital problem.

McNary's Views On Farm Problem

American Market and Parity Price for Farm Products to Be Party Goal.

A promise to the farmer that he will be assured of the American market for his products was made in an address delivered at Aurora, Illinois, by Senator Charles L. McNary, Republican candidate for Vice-President, and co-author of the McNary-Haugen bill.

Senator McNary

Senator McNary said the Republican administration under Wendell Willkie "will further, and by every means, seek to enlarge the American market for farm products—both by improving the consuming power of city consumers and also by encouraging the industrial uses of farm raw materials. Thirdly, it will search for a formula for freeing the American farm price from the vagaries of foreign markets; putting the farmer on the same footing with other American producers, who sell at the American—not the world—price."

Senator McNary's speech sounded the keynote of the Republican campaign on the farm problem. He criticized the woeful failure of the New Deal to solve the farm problem in a permanent and effective manner. He said, "Actually, the basic farm problem is no nearer solution today than it was on March 4th, 1933. The New Deal has reached none of its fundamental objectives. Its farm program is a thing of shreds and patches; settling nothing; merely putting off the day of reckoning. If I did not believe that the New Deal's 'success' could be enormously bettered, I should not—as a farmer and a friend of the farmer—be standing before you today. If I thought that the best the Government of the United States had to offer the farmer was regimented subsistence and a permanent state of disparity, then I should despair for my country."

The speaker endorsed heartily the statement, made on several occasions by Mr. Willkie, to the effect that the present form of the farm program would be continued until something better can be developed. He said, "I know of no one who advocates withholding from the farmer the grants he now has—soil conservation, parity payments, crop loans, and other benefits—until the prolonged emergency is past and the farmer no longer is at a disadvantage. I have many farmer friends who are gravely concerned over the deficits which these benefits—together with all the New Deal's expenditures—are piling up for deferred payment. The farm population will pay its full share in meeting these bills. Furthermore, the administration of these vast paternalistic enterprises leaves much to be desired. The inevitable faults of bureaucracy—red tape, favoritism, confusion and delay—plague these enterprises. They should be decentralized. Costs should be reduced."

His direct statement giving his view on the relative merits of the New Deal administration of the farm program and the Republican policy was as follows: "The New Deal, satisfied with its farm program, sees the aggregate improvement it has been able to make in the farmers' lot a maximum aim. I see it as a minimum. I accept that program only as a stopgap substitute for something better until something better can be provided. And I assert, in full confidence, that the next administration will be able to provide something better."

In further explanation of the difference between the New Deal accomplishments and the aggressive Republican policy on the farm problem Senator McNary declared, "An administration worth its salt will strive for parity prices—not parity payments. It will seek to make our surpluses a blessing and not a curse."

Regarding the results of the New Deal farm program, the candidate said, "Surrounded by mountainous surpluses, or reserves, the farmer has been frozen into a dependence on the government. The New Deal, as everyone knows, did not invent the farm problem. Its offense lies in the fact that, finding agriculture ill of a functional disorder, it made the disorder chronic.

He continued, "Secretary Wallace has renamed the agricultural surpluses. You will, of course, recall that the great gluts of wheat, corn and cotton that still plague the New Deal began as plain surpluses. Then, in 1938, Mr. Wallace changed the name, but not the substance, to the 'ever-normal granary'—a condition which if not checked, seems on the way to providing ever-normal poverty for the farmer."

WILLKIE AND THE PRESS

Roy A. Brown, San Rafael, California, Independent publisher of the National Editorial Association, and Wendell L. Willkie (right), presidential candidate met in San Francisco during Willkie's recent visit and talked newspapers.

Willkie reiterated to Brown what he had said once to another writer:

"I'm a great reader of the local newspapers in whatever town I happen to be, and I read the classified advertisements as closely as the news columns. There is no better index to a community. How many persons are advertising for jobs—and what kind of jobs. What sort of situations are available. Who has what to sell or swap. I can learn more about a city from the advertising columns of its newspapers than from its chamber of commerce."

Willkie might well have been speaking for Newspaper Week publication.

and a Chamberlain man, provided one surprise. He went into the war cabinet, presumably as a concession to die-hard tories.

The caminet changes came against a background of British air activity that appeared to exceed that of Germany and Italy.

Rome reported that another meeting between Chancellor Adolph Hitler and Benito Mussolini might be in the offing. Spain's envoy, Ramon Serrano suner, extended his stay in Rome to have another conference with Foreign Minister Count Galeazzo Ciano, and possibly to see Pope Pius. The Pope was said to be preparing to issue an encyclical against communism.

The encyclical was said to be inspired by the more active position assumed by Russia in the world as a result of pressure from both sides in the European war.

Three new Italian divisions, totalling some 45,000 men, were reported by Athens to have been concentrated on the Albanian-Greek border, bringing forces there to about 200,000 men. Vichy heard of the completon of joint German-Italian plans for a land, sea and air drive on Gibraltar, presumably with Spanish cooperation.

In the far east Japan had a spy scare and war-like defense exercises. A new chief of the imperial General Staff—Gen. Gen Sugiyama—was named. Britain prepared to reopen the Burma road as a source for supplies to China Oct. 17.

W. D. Alexander was here from Sacramento Wednesday, attending to business interests and calling on friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Chappell and son, Richard, were recently here from Mina, Nev., visiting the former's sister, Mrs. James L. Wilkinson, and family.

Power Policy Stirs Row

bitterest political exchanges of the 1940 campaign.

"Perhaps the senator from Nebraska (Norris) will explain to this body," Bridges said, "why there are 11 counties in west central Nebraska that have the local name of the 'Norris Desert,' a man-made desert, made by the new deal at the insistence of the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska. They are three hydro-electric plants. Two of them are on a stream that in very recent times has been dry for more than 100 miles and for as much as 222 days in a single year.

"It is a matter of public record that at the complaint of Sen. Norris, Harold Ickes disregarded the engineering reports and at the Senator's insistence poured $60,000,000 down that Nebraska rat hole. The two 'dams' that are in operation are bankrupt as the hearings of the house appropriations committee show."

Ridiculing Biddle as a "tame millionaire," Bridges said he had "abused his official position, first as counsel for the Tennessee Valley Authority investigating committee, and, second, as solicitor general in attempts to injure and destroy a newspaper whose only afternoon rival was a paper in which Francis Biddle was financially interested. Had he succeeded, he'd have lined his pockets with the resulting dividends."

The Chattanooga News ceased publication on D c. 16, 1939, and Bridges said that on July 29, 1940, after Willkie's nomination, it first was charged that he had killed the paper.

Mrs. Brewster Kills Deer

And Grandpa Takes Kidding From Five-Year-Old About "Killing A Calf"

"I want to tell you, son, that the female is more deadly than the male."

It was "Dad" Al Brewster, who had come into our little workhouse to pass the observation.

We agreed we'd always thought so, and then he cited to us his most recent evidence to support that conclusion.

Thursday morning, Mrs. Elwood Brewster went deer hunting, within a mile of their residence in Upper Placerville, and brought down a forked horn.

"I was helping her and the children bring it in and the babies were giving me an awful razzing," said Grandpa Brewster. "The five year old boy even went so far as to say that as a deer hunter, the best I'd do would be to kill a calf.

"I've gotta get me a deer, someway; and at least a three pointer, too."

Rites Friday Morning For Samuel Sutherland

He is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Virginia White, of Shingle, and a son, Samuel, Jr., of Santa Barbara.

"SPECIAL PLATE" BAN FOR AUTOMOBILE OWNERS TO BE CONTINUED

SACRAMENTO, (UP)—The ban on issuing special auto license numbers started this year will be continued in 1941 James M. Carter, director of motor vehicles, has announced.

Carter said his department already has received many requests for special plates.

Plates will be issued as they are taken from packing cases by the clerks for delivery over the counter or through the mails.

The elimination last year of the special privilege number system resulted in an actual saving of more than $50,000, he said.

Mrs. Elma Casselman, sister of Mrs. Merco Petach and mother of Virginia Casselman, of this city, was operated upon recently at Richmond Hospital. Her many friends will be glad to know that she is getting along as well as might be expected.
